Cookies

Most websites use cookies to improve the user experience by "remembering" you, helping you to navigate them efficiently and perform certain functions. The European Union e-Privacy Directive requires that website owners must provide users with clear and comprehensive information about cookies or similar devices used on their websites and the users must provide consent to the usage of these devices.

What is a cookie

Cookies are small, often encrypted text files that are created and stored on a user's computer or mobile device by a website's server when you access the website. The website can then retrieve and read the data held to "remember" you and provide certain functions.

The amount of data held in the cookie determines what functionality it provides and can range from simply remembering the items selected on a previous page through to remembering which items were bought from another site and providing advertising for similar products.

The different cookies used can be classified into four types:

1. Essential- these cookies are necessary to enable you to move about a website or to provide certain features requested.
2. Analytic Performance Cookies- these cookies are used to collect data on how a site is being used to enable the owners to tailor the sites structure of content. The data collected is normally anonymous and may be analysed by a third party, e.g. Google.
3. Functional cookies- these cookies enhance the functionality of a website by remembering your preferences, e.g. which town/ city you live in.
4. Behavioural/ Third party- these cookies collect data on your browsing activity and this data is then used to provide tailored advertising based on this activity over time, e.g. if you are looking at car insurance products, you may be offered similar insurance products provided by third parties within advertising banners or similar.

Who uses the information gathered- the information gathered by cookies may be used by the website owners (First Party) or may be supplied to other parties to offer users related services e.g. behavioural marketing (Third party).

How long do they last- cookies can expire at the end of a browser session (when you exit/ shut down the browser) in which case they are called Session Cookies, or can be stored on the computer in between browsers sessions, in which case they are called Persistent Cookies.

What you can do if don't want to accept the cookies used

By continuing to use this website, you agree to having the cookies detailed above stored on your device. You may refuse to accept cookies by adjusting the settings on your browser that allows you to refuse the setting of cookies, however, if you select this setting you may be unable to access certain parts of the site.

If you wish to restrict or block the use of cookies from this sites or others, the Help function within your browser will guide you through the process. The website www.aboutcookies.org also contains additional detailed guides on how to do this on a wide variety of browsers.

Unless you have adjusted your browser setting so that it will refuse cookies, Ravel's system may issue cookies when you log on to the site.
